22. Look for light Light is everything in photography. Spend your time looking for light, even if you aren't taking photos. Look for sun beams and breaks, reflections, shadows, natural light, artificial light. See how light interacts with the environment. See light. 23. Embrace shade The wonderful side effect of light is shadow. Shadow is as valuable as light and gives depth and shape to objects.

The more you experiment, and the more photos you take, the better your photos will be. It's not just about the quality, either - it's also about quantity. You'll find that later trips and photoshoots almost always have more winners than your early attempts. That's not to say your early photos are always going to be bad.
