The book's title is Daily Rituals, but my focus in writing it was really people's routines. The word connotes ordinariness and even a lack of thought; to follow a routine is to be on autopilot. But one's daily routine is also a choice, or a whole series of choices.

Daily Rituals, which assembles the working regimens of 161 artists and thinkers into a lean, engaging volume, makes one thing clear: There's no such thing as the way to create good work, but all the greats have their way — and some are spectacularly weird.

Kafka is one of 161 inspired—and inspiring—minds, among them, novelists, poets, playwrights, painters, philosophers, scientists, and mathematicians, who describe how they subtly maneuver the many (self-inflicted) obstacles and (self-imposed) daily rituals to get done the work they love to do, whether by waking early or staying up late ...

Daily Rituals How Artists Work I'm a big advocate of starting your day the right way - if you're up early with guns blazing you're going to have a productive, efficient day. On the other hand if you rise late and have no routine of sorts you've lost the day before it's even really begun...

confirm how divergent are the motivators and biorhythms for each of them: some apparently environmental and others seemingly innate, but all of them with a mystifying combination unique to that human being at that place and time.

Daily rituals : how artists work (Book, 2013) [WorldCat.org]

This book is (temporarily) part of my own daily ritual: I read a couple of entries over cereal to start each day. Nothing inspiring for artists but quite comforting in its revelations of the very human tics and idiosyncrasies of the individuals included.

Here also are the daily rituals of Charles Darwin, Andy Warhol, John Updike, Twyla Tharp, Benjamin Franklin, William Faulkner, Jane Austen, Anne Rice, and Igor Stravinsky (he was never able to compose unless he was sure no one could hear him and, when blocked, stood on his head to “clear the brain”).
